NOSE SURGERY AT HIRSLANDEN

TREATMENT

Septorhinoplasty is one of the most common yet also most sophisticated operations in the field of plastic surgery. Located in the centre of the face, the nose significantly influences a person's appearance. The form and function of the nose are closely connected. Septorhinoplasty thus consists of septoplasty, which straightens the nasal septum, and rhinoplasty, which corrects the external shape of the nose. The septum plays an important role both in relation to the organ's function and its appearance.

Similarly, an aesthetic correction not only changes the shape of the nose, but also improves the person's ability to breathe. As a result, most nose surgeries are a combination of functional and aesthetic nose correction.

Your personalised surgery plan will be prepared during a preliminary examination. A medical specialist will discuss your options with you and recommend the most suitable nose correction technique. The procedure is almost always performed under general anaesthetic.

After the procedure, it is important to reduce the swelling and promote the healing process. Then after one to two weeks, the patient can return to their usual work and social life without any restrictions.
